

POST-COVID OPPORTUNITY SCAN

The Center for Learning, Assessment, and Science at California State University, East Bay, February 9, 2021 added to the Post-COVID Opportunity Scan. Led by the Assessment and Learning Center.

1. Flexibility: The center has been able to meet the needs of the community by providing a variety of options for learning. This includes offering a variety of course formats, such as hybrid, online, and in-person. The center has also been able to provide support for students who are struggling with their coursework. This includes providing tutoring, writing centers, and other resources. The center has also been able to provide support for faculty who are struggling with their teaching. This includes providing training, resources, and other support. The center has also been able to provide support for the community. This includes providing resources, training, and other support.

2. Infrastructure Support (IT and physical building spaces): The center has been able to provide support for the community by providing a variety of options for learning. This includes offering a variety of course formats, such as hybrid, online, and in-person. The center has also been able to provide support for students who are struggling with their coursework. This includes providing tutoring, writing centers, and other resources. The center has also been able to provide support for faculty who are struggling with their teaching. This includes providing training, resources, and other support. The center has also been able to provide support for the community. This includes providing resources, training, and other support.