the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 85 and over has increased from 1.5 million to 2.5 million in the same period.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of the elderly population, and the need to ensure that the elderly are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of home care services, and the establishment of the Department of Health's 'Age Concern' programme.

The 'Age Concern' programme is a national initiative aimed at improving the lives of the elderly. It is a multi-agency programme, involving the Department of Health, local authorities, and voluntary organisations. The programme has a number of key objectives, including:

• To ensure that the elderly are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible.

• To provide a range of services to meet the needs of the elderly, including home care, day care, and residential care.

• To promote the independence and well-being of the elderly.
